Diocesan Map
of Cumbria

Since the creation of the Diocese of Chester in 1541, the area of Cumbria comprised:

Area A: part of the Diocese of Durham;
Area B: the Diocese of Carlisle (except the Parish of Nether Denton which was transferred from the Diocese of Durham to the Diocese of Carlisle in 1703); and Areas C and D: part of the Diocese of Chester.

The following changes occurred up to 1920:
1836: D becomes part of the newly-formed Diocese of Ripon.
1856: The Diocese of Carlisle (B) is enlarged by the addition of C.
1882: A is transferred to the newly-formed Diocese of Newcastle.
1920: D is transferred to the newly-formed Diocese of Bradford.

Location of Parish Registers

With some exceptions, registers of former north and east Cumberland parishes are now deposited in the Cumbria Record Office, Carlisle; those of former west Cumberland parishes in the Cumbria Record Office and Local Studies Library, Whitehaven; those of former Westmorland parishes and the Sedbergh area in the Cumbria Record Office, Kendal; and those of Furness parishes in the Cumbria Record Office, Barrow-in-Furness.

Researchers are advised to confirm these details before visiting a record office.

Full details of the covering dates and location of registers for all Cumbrian parishes may be found in the Cumbria Archive Service's publication Cumbrian Ancestors.
